Global

New York University, the largest independent research university in the United States, is primarily located in the heart of downtown Manhattan. Beyond our campus in New York City lies a world opportunity within NYU's global network. With NYU Abu Dhabi and NYU Shanghai, our new degree-granting campuses, as well as 11 international academic centers in Africa, Asia, Europe, North America, and South America, NYU offers global experiences to all members of its community.

NYU has embarked on the project of becoming a Global Network University, a university that challenges the idea that a university can only deliver education at a single home campus. Instead, we have created a structure that allows ...

Staff

NYU Digital Library Technology Services (DLTS) processes, enables access to and preserves digital materials that come from both the NYU community and from collaborating partner organizations. Our methods include digitization, software development, research, project coordination and the articulation of best practices. DLTS creates infrastructure and systems to advance networked scholarly communication and explores the questions raised by the use of these services as they continue to evolve.

Projects

This selection of DLTS work includes collections, scholarly communications and research projects that have been developed by the faculty and the Library. DLTS also acquires and stores collections to which access is not yet possible because of their copyright status. We store and preserve these materials, for the long term, in the same way as the open web sites below.

Afghanistan Digital Library retrieves, restores and makes available the first sixty years of Afghanistan's published cultural heritage. The project is collecting, cataloging, digitizing and making available over the Internet as many Afghan publications from the period 1871-1930 as it is possible to identify and locate. The project has also trained a staff at the National Archives in Kabul in conservation and digitization and is engaged in the cataloging and digitization of materials held in various public and private collections inside Afghanistan. In time the project plans to carry the dissemination of Afghan publications through the period between 1931 and 1950.

Providing universal availability to this broad historical span of Afghanistan's published history and, in the process, constructing a national bibliography for the country, the Afghanistan Digital Library will reconstruct an essential part of Afghanistan's cultural heritage. The Afghanistan Digital Library is a project of New York University Libraries with the support of the National Endowment for the Humanities, The Reed Foundation and the W.L.S. Spencer Foundation.

The Ancient World Digital Library (AWDL)comprises an interrelated a set of initiatives by the Institute for the Study of the Ancient World to accelerate and enhance access to the emerging global library of digital publications on the ancient world.

ARCHIVE

The digital images of historical documents in this archive preserve the words of hundreds of eyewitnesses to the American Revolution in and around New York City. The letters, newspapers, broadsides, legal records, and maps presented here record events from the early years of the Dutch settlement of New Amsterdam through the British occupation of the city during the Revolution. Here you can explore the history of New York through the words of those who lived it...

FEATURE

While all of the documents in this collection are important, we have selected some that are especially fascinating or significant. This section will be updated periodically with fresh information about individual items from the collection. Currently featured is a letter from Mrs. A. Hampton detailing the events in New York City during those tense days immediately following the arrival of the British fleet....

LEARN

Digital imaging technology makes it possible to share these rare and often fragile documents with a wider audience than ever before. This section will contain lesson plans and curriculum materials to assist K-12 teachers who want to enrich the classroom expeience with primary resources. This section will expand and change as teachers develop new ways to incorporate these documents into the educational experience...

TOUR

New York City has always played a central role in the history of the United States. The guided tour will give a brief overview of New York City during the colonial and revolutionary periods. The tour is arranged in chronological order with each page including a single relevant example from the thousands of documents available in the archives...
